Profession vs. Practice

To the Editor of The N. Y. Tribune.

Sin: Many of our political friends abroad conceive that the frequent complaints of correspondents in regard to disloyal clerks in the governmental departments have no foundation in fact, and consequently but little notice is taken of their retainure in office to the exclusion of good men and true. Now, I profess to know something of the status of clerks here, and am not one who would wish to see the Administration resort to proscription on the grounds of mere partyism. I nevertheless think that if a closer line of discrimination were resorted to we should have fewer of that class of suspected individuals in the departments, and less reason to murmur at the powers that be." When the "Potter Investigation Committee" commenced its labors, it was termed an inquisitorial body, and denounced by the guilty as a secret conclave, gotten up to force the several heads of bueans to do their beliests, whether the individual oming under the ban of their displeasure was loyal disloyal to the Government. This was the cry tarted in this city and taken up by every questionsble journal, from The N. Y. Herald to The Washington Star. But the investigation went on desp te the croakings of "old Government fixtures," and the result was that three fifths of the employees under the old regimes were found to be bilious cases, and wonderfully mixed up, in most instances, with the Seceders. I do not pretend to say that the revelations made before Mr. Potter's committee were in all cases divested of prejudice, or that witnesses did not sometimes "o'erleap the mark" in their anxiety to make a clear case of disloyalty. Yet we are not to be guided in our jurgments by isolated cases of wrong, but to look at the great and invaluable mount of good accomplished by the inquiry instituted the House Committee. Treason was hunted up, e sympathizers of Jeff. Davis and his lawless band ferreted out, and the men who marked themselves behind their official ouths were stripped of their disguise and their principles baid bare to the public gaze, that none might be in doubt as to which side of the Union claimed the largest share of their affection. Such, then, was the position of things at the close of this work, and such the good accomplished by airing the spurious from the genuine friends of the Union, in the thorough loyalty and fidelity of the Su-Committee has won for himself the character of an bonest and faithful public servant.
